

A Death at the White Camellia Orphanage

Winner of The Ferrol Sams Award for Fiction
Winner of Silver Award for Fiction,
ForeWord Book of the Year Awards

After a death at the White Camellia Orphanage, young Pip Tatnall leaves Lexsy, Georgia to become a road kid, riding the rails east, west, and north. A bright, unusual boy who is disillusioned at a young age, Pip believes that he sees guilt shining in the faces of men wherever he goes. On his picaresque journey, he sweeps through society, revealing the highest and lowest in human nature and only slowly coming to self-understanding. He searches the points of the compass for what will help, groping for a place where he can feel content, certain that he has no place where he belongs and that he rides the rails through a great darkness. His difficult path to collect enough radiance to light his way home is the road of a boy struggling to come to terms with the cruel but sometimes lovely world of Depression-era America. On Marly Youmans's prior forays into the world of the past, reviewers praised her spellbinding force (Bob Sumner, Orlando Sentinel), prodigious powers of description (Philip Gambone, New York Times), serious artistry, unobtrusively beautiful language, and considerable power (Fred Chappell, Raleigh News & Observer), haunting, lyrical language and fierce intelligence (starred review, Publishers Weekly.) Howard Bahr wrote of The Wolf Pit, Ms. Youmans is an inspiration to every writer who must compete with himself. I had thought Catherwood unsurpassable, but Ms. Youmans has done it. Her characters are real; they live and move in the stream of Time as if they had passed only yesterday. Her lyricism breaks my heart and fills me with envy and delight. No other writer I know of can bring the past to us so musically, so truly.
