

Beyond Justice

A wealthy landowner is mortally beaten by three thieves on his horse farm in northern California. His wife dies the same night. The criminals are quickly caught, tried, and given five-year prison terms. With little explanation, they are released in six months. The landowner's daughter, Magda, now the last surviving member of a 200-year-old horse breeding family, leaves her university teaching position and stays on the farm to sort out the lies from the truth. From the beginning, Magda knows that the trial of the killers is a farce. Who would hire an expensive lawyer to defend three drifters? And why? Magda is befriended by a woman physician who works at the state mental hospital and a police chief from a nearby town who both want better justice for Magda's parents. Magda wants justice too, but she wants the men who tortured her father dead. First she must track down the people who ordered the attack. The trail takes her to the local government and to the State House.
