

Tales from the Bog

When a writer suffers from writers block, it is a condition only equaled by constipation. The proverbial brain fart and verbal diarrhea are compare able with trying to defecate an iron monkey! Luckily inspiration comes from different places and when the head is empty and the bowels full, Tales from the Bog are born. The following short stories were written simultaneously and the whole concept of this edition is to empty my writers stomach whilst flooding my head with new ideas. Faceless were written on the back of my first book and ignited the concept for the second story called Conversations with God. Both handles life differently and the difference between Tim and Jason is more radically different than the lives of the two brothers in story 3, called Nick and Dodge. These stories wrote itself and I never tried to push the direction and flow of each character. It still took more than 3 years to complete but like a Painters painting done, in retrospect, I will do it all over again. The Characters and stories were masters of my mind for so long and they kept hammering my sub-conscious that I had to except inspiration when it came. Awkward places, strange surroundings and mostly at night, I would hammer away at the keyboard totally fixed on the flow of the storyline, hoping the grip would soon release so I could continue my daily life as a simple businessman. This Ive done, for my duty is to put ink to thought and dreams in line. Please follow me through the following stories and hope you find them as enjoyable as the Painter with words who finally could sit back and just admire the handiwork. Aw Struck! But grateful! Faceless is totally fiction and it is not based on any known events or persons. I just wanted to write something that could build onto itself. Conversations with God was much harder to write because it was based on a lot of facts and actual people like Jason and The Teacher did exist. Nick and Dodge was the worst because it is the first time I am trying to describe my own familys background in a Country that was so wrapped up in Politics and Religion that I tried to lend credit to these characters, because in my eyes they were heroes. From Grandpa Sammys mouth and Nick and Dodge filling in the blanks when needed, this story is totally alive because their Grandson Hendrik Eilers were the real story teller. He would elaborate and exaggerate to the point that I knew that they would have to be born from my mind to paper or they will never allow me to rest. Their journey and experiences were each taken, a bit dusted and mostly told as they happened with a lot of coloring in. This book is dedicated to Uncle Hendrik Eilers. Come join me on this journey to the world of just people; the faceless, lame and free.
