

The Bar-20 Three - 1921

Idaho Norton, laughing heartily, backed out of the barroom of Quayles hotel and trod firmly on the foot of Ward Corwin, sheriff of the county, who was about to pass the door, Idaho wheeled, a casual apology trembling on his lips, to hear a biting, sarcastic flow of words, full of profanity, and out of all proportion to the careless injury. The sheriff's coppery face was a deeper color than usual and bore an expression not pleasant to see. The puncher stepped back apace, alert, lithe, balanced, the apology forgotten, and gazed insolently into the peace officers wrathful eyes.
