

Facing the Fire

A monster devours the town, building by building. The fire brigade makes one last stand, while the towns elderly, sick, and children stand on the town pier facing the cold Atlantic, or death by fire, unless someone comes up with a miracle. It really happened right here in Maine, in October, 1947. While City officials hope for the best, they fight tooth and nail against the fire, and desperately search the sea for a remote U.S. Coast Guard Cutter, steaming their way. As the cloud of smoke descends, 15-year-old Tony DeCarly faces gale winds in an open boat, hoping to lead a rescue flotilla across Frenchman Bay. Can he do it? Meanwhile, poet Kristin Martin, another teenager faced with maturing during the natural disaster, watches Tony from the deck of the last large yacht left in port. Already she has learned that people wear thin facades that blow away in the face of disaster. Will the strength within her heart be stronger than the inferno? Will the romance sparked within her by the disaster, continue to grow? Or will it turn to ash like the rest of Bar Harbors hopes?
