

The Defensor pacis of Marsiglio of Padua

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTE The most complete examination of the manuscripts of the Defensor Pads thus far published is by an American scholar, Dr. James Sullivan, now State Historian of New York, The Manuscripts and Date of Marsiglio of Paduas Defensor Pads, in the English Historical Review, 1905, pp. 293-307. Dr. Sullivan personally examined twenty manuscripts in several European libraries and drew certain conclusions as to the date of composition of the Defensor. It is a matter of regret that other occupations have prevented him from carrying on his studies to the point of preparing a much needed new edition of the original. Meanwhile this work has been taken up by Professor Richard Scholz of Leipzig, and his edition, to appear in the Monumenta Germaniae Historica in a Section to be called Tradatus de jure imperiali saec. XIII et XIV, may be expected shortly. A brief summary of the printed editions is given by Dr. Sullivan in an article on Marsiglio of Padua and William of Ockam in the American Historical Review for April and July, 1897. I have made use of the very imperfect edition of Goldast in his Monarchiae Romani Imperii, etc., 3 vols, fol., Frankfurt, 1668, vol. II, pp. 154-312, and also of Professor Scholzs much abbreviated edition in usum scholarum in Quellensammlung zur Deutschen Geschichte, 1914. No complete translation from the original has ever been made into any modern language, but partial translations have appeared in French (before 1363), Italian (1363, from the French), German (1545), and English. The English translation by William Marshall was published in 1535 and is now extremely rare. There are three copies in the Bodleian and one in the British Museum, but I am not aware of any copy in this country. Up to the present time the most complete and satisfactory analysis of the contents of the Defensor is that given by Sigmund Riezler in his illuminating study, Die literarischen Widersacher der Pdpste zur Zeit Ludwig des Baiers, 1874. All later writers have borrowed freely from this, but its conclusions have been modified on many points of detail. The most careful study of Marsiglios life is that of Professor Baldassare Labanca of Padua, who writes from the point of view of a liberal Italian patriot with a strong tinge of local Paduan pride: Marsiglio da Padova, Riformatore politico e religioso del secolo XIV, 1882. Shorter discussions of Marsiglio and related authors are to be found in: .....

-----THE DEFENSOR PACIS OF MARSIGLIO OF PADUA To understand the importance of the political doctrines of Marsiglio of Padua one must bring them into relation with those of two of his not remote predecessors, Thomas Aquinas and Dante Alighieri. Aquinas died in 1274, three or four years after the birth of Marsiglio and Dante died in 1321, two or three years before the appearance of Marsiglios great work, the Defensor Pacis. One might be tempted, therefore, to speak of these three notable contributors to political theory as representatives of contemporary thought. To do so, however, would be to miss the most essential quality in each. Aquinas, here as elsewhere in his monumental activity, is the spokesman of an epoch in human history that within a short generation after him was gone forever. Dante sounds the note of a transition just beginning to outline itself clearly in the rapid march of events. Marsiglio is the herald of a new world, the prophet of a new social order, acutely conscious of his modernness and not afraid to confess it. His book has often been called the most remarkable literary product of the Middle Ages, and I am inclined to accept this verdict. And yet, even the name of Marsiglio is unknown to most persons outside the narrow circle of students of political theory. Speaking to an audience of clergymen educated quite beyond the ordinary level of their class, I found that there was but one in the company who had ever heard Marsiglios name, and that was only because he had been a pupil of
