

Millennial Projections

This fictional compilation, dating from 1982, combines some sixteen short-prose pieces with subjects ranging from musical evolution to Christmas trees, Black Holes to Esperanto, and space travel to modern art. Of this number, our favourite is the title piece, a fantasy projection into a millennial future in which we enter the mind of a superman who is preparing to undergo an acid trip, view life in what is called the post-human millennium from a spiritual leaders standpoint as he grapples with his counselling responsibilities vis-a-vis the superhuman flock, and sample a controllers perspective on post-human life from the administrative sidelines. One could argue that this is Mr O'Loughlins Brave New World, but it was with a view to refuting Huxleyite cynicism that he set out to fashion so positive a futuristic projection. - A Centretruths editorial.
