

Running Down Terror

A timely new thriller by Jim Ricca Professor Tom Carazo felt relatively secure knowing the U.S. government had the terrorists on the run. They were killing Al Qaeda and other terrorist leaders by the bushel, with drones, Special Forces teams and air strikes. But one evening, while having a few drinks in a Philadelphia, neighborhood bar, he overhears several men discussing their plans to destroy the United States from within. Tom urgently tries to convince the FBI, Homeland Security and the CIA that an attack is immanent, but his warnings fall on deaf ears. Frustrated over the ignorance and arrogance his report receives from the people sworn to protect the country, he and a few friends decide to track down and eliminate the terrorist cell on their own, but they soon realize that the scale of the attack is far beyond anything they or anyone else could possibly imagine. Millions upon millions would die as a result of the unthinkable and horrendous attack if Carazo and his friends fail to find and prevent the terrorists from their cataclysmic assault on western civilization. Running Down Terror details just how easy it would be for a group of terrorists to legally enter the country; transport their weapons of mass destruction to many large cities, and then unleash hell on earth. If you feel certain our country is immune from a catastrophic terrorist strike, and are positive it could never happen, read, Running Down Terror and guess again.
