

Passage of the Kissing People

The Kissing People, Mama Marossis antique Italian silver brooch - stolen and lost ... PASSAGE OF THE KISSING PEOPLE is a story of love, betrayal and family language set on the grounds of the Sonoma State Home for the Feeble Minded (as it was called then). In this lyrical tale of memory, a fifty-year-old artists past leads to a romantic mystery in his present. In 1953, Michael Kohler, 7 is desperate to save his family from sickness, storms and the political warfare raging at the State Home where his parents work. He steals the Kissing People, the good luck brooch cherished by the warm Italian family of his childhood love, Gisella. Then his father lays a devastating charge of suicide about Gisella s brother. Emotional backlash forces the Kohlers to flee Somona. In their flight a pajama-clad Michael tries to return the brooch and loses it - as well as his trust in his father. The death of Gisellas brother Joe, an inmate on leave from the Home causes young Michael to call his father a liar. A phrase from that moment - Are you scared to learn the goddamned truth? - echoes between them for forty years, the nuclear weapon in their family language. At first a challenge to authority, it becomes a demand for justice, then a plea for love, and finally, an offer of reconciliation. By 1996 Michael is a divorced dad of a teenage daughter; his father is almost eighty, with a failing heart. Michael is challenged by an anonymous email. He must return to Sonoma to face Gisella, and the survivors of the family from whom he stole the silver brooch. To gain forgiveness for his dying father and himself, he must find the long-lost Kissing People.
