Not illustrated. 1898 edition. Excerpt: ... warrant a decree setting aside his deed.¹ And a deed will be set aside upon the ground of undue influence and mental incapacity when made but a few hours before death by a person afflicted with pneumonia, from the regular course of which he must have been delirious or in a stupor at that time. Where the mind of a party to a contract was previously sound, the state of his bodily health is to be looked to on the question of his competency, not as evidence of insanity, but to ascertain what effect it had on his mind. But the fact that a grantor was in the earlier stages of a disease consisting of a continuous disorganization of the brain itself, but which was not uniform in its influence upon the understanding, will not invalidate his deed where he comprehended what he was doing and the consequences of his act at the time. Nor will evidence of mere difficulty of speech upon the part of one who had had an attack of paralysis which was not severe, prove anything as to his capacity to execute a deed. And a paralytic stroke will not invalidate a note and mortgage, though it affected the mortgagors mind, where he had so far recovered as to assume control of his business and carry on important transactions. Nor would such a transaction be affected by several attacks of paralysis from which the party had never recovered, but had been getting worse both in body and mind, where the consideration was adequate and he fully comprehended what he was doing and intended to do what he did. 9. Adjudication of unsoundness. The question as to the effect of an adjudication of soundness or unsoundness of mind of a party upon an inquisition or a commission of lunacy, or on application for the
