

Town Without Law

Gold Point, a festering town in the West, is completely in the power of local tyrant Sherman Hall. With no governing authority, Hall is free to set the law as he pleases, and the law of the gun is the only one he rules by. Rex MClyde, an honest man, grew up in Gold Point, alongside Sherman Hall. But Hall views him as a threat. In an attempt to rid Gold Point of MClyde once and for all, Hall frames him for a murder he didnt commit. With the lawyers under Halls command, MClyde stands no chance and quickly finds himself cast out into the desert without food or water. All but dead, MClyde is rescued by fellow exile Seth Pardoe. Pardoe, a loner himself, sees that MClyde is a decent man and discloses the secret location of vast gold deposits in the mountains. With neither of them willing to return to Gold Point, they embark upon building a town with their new found wealth a clean town that attracts decent men and women, like Clem Atkinson and his beautiful daughter, Louise. As word spreads of MClyde and Pardoes new town, Hall sets out to destroy it in every way possible. Brutal assaults launched on the new town bring it to the point of destruction, but MClyde will not be defeated and he patiently awaits each new attack, outwitting Hall at every turn. As time goes on and the brutality of Halls attacks continue, MClyde must fight to save the thing that means everything to him. Town Without Law is an enthralling story of justice and revenge. Praise for John Russell Fearn A classic story of adventure and courage in the Old West. - Tom Kasey, best-selling author of Trade Off.
