

A CANADIAN AMBASSADOR IN SEOUL: Romance and Intrigue in South Korea's Capital City

The Canadian Ambassador to the Republic of Korea, a man of late forties, is being sued for divorce by his wife. He has caved to depression, is planning to blow his brains out with his expensive Bernelli Italian shotgun. The shooting death of another Canadian out behind the lavish Shilla Hotel works to bring him back to his former strength. Mystically, things he learns about the deceased Joseph Merriweather help fill the hollowness in his body and titillate his dying spirit. He learns through his close friend, Lieutenant General Woo Jong-bong, who directs South Korea's National Intelligence Service that Merriweather used to be one of his operatives. Yoo pleads with the ambassador to keep the Canadian's death a secret, as a matter of state business and national security.

Unknown to the ambassador, the Canadian was shot by Yoo's own brother. He is a minor North Korean rogue operative who has been under Yoo's benevolent surveillance and personal protection. As the ambassador learns more about the tough Canadian and his many clandestine experiences in North Korea, he senses the man's spirit touching his. He tries to emulate him, get rid of some of his funk, begins to put his embassy back in order. Emboldened, he steps out into the more plebeian world, where staid ambassadors may not tread in confidence or with surety. He consorts with a young Korean artist who has works among the prostitutes in the infamous Bunker Hill area in Seoul's Itaewon foreigner district. He is fully taken by her beauty, her skills, her wonderful mind and her grace, and moves her into his official residence out in the hills of Sungbuk-dong, on the fringe of the forested wonders of Pukansan National Park. It is a blessing for the ambassador. He not only finds wholesome, fulfilling love but through her learns to see and feel the beauty of the great Korea where he is privileged to be. She not only sees her world, but tries to see what is beyond her view and bring both past and future to her art; she tries even to put sounds into the blending tints of her colored pencil drawings. So his life grows in that way, and spiritually as well. When Canada's minister of foreign affairs and trade sends his deputy, an iron handed woman lawyer, over to fire him, the fireworks begin. General Woo goes into action to thwart her. Another Canadian is killed and one badly wounded in action that unfolds in the Canadian Embassy. The Canadian Ambassador's life is forever changed and for a while he keeps his post, but he knows they will come for his job again. The book, a spritely adventure on every page, takes the reader throughout places in Seoul many visitors never see, behind the doors of embassies, in the home of the director of Korea's National Intelligence Service, in the Blue House office of the President of the Republic of Korea, and on the much traveled, ever changing streets of Seoul.
